

Snow clearing, Derby city centre

After the second spate of December snow, pavements in the city once again quickly became slushy and slippery to walk on. Teams of offenders were again drafted in to assist the city's Street Pride staff in clearing footways. These were then salted by Street Pride staff.

Neil Wagstaff, Divisional Community Payback Manager, said,

“This was just the sort of job we are able to help with. The offenders worked extremely hard in the cold temperatures clearing snow and ice from paths. We liaised with the council's Street pride staff to ensure we dealt with the key problem areas.

“This kind of work is high profile and we received many positive comments from the public. Anyone who has cleared their own paths and drives will know how hard the work is, especially if you are doing it all day.”
